Ideas in Action:

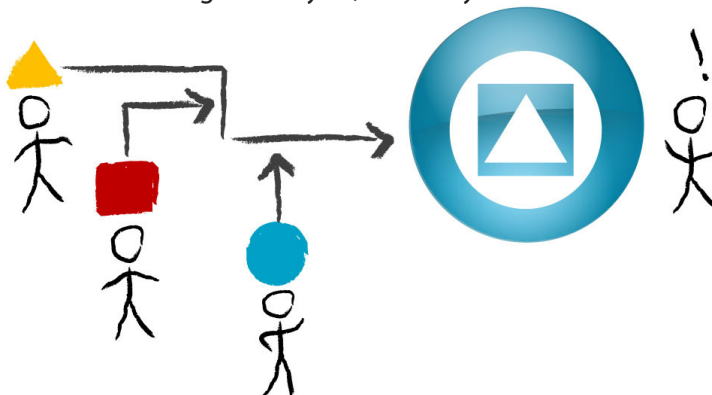

Counties and townships are using Community Center to share information and services on one website. County staff describe and maintain county services online, while townships manage their own sets of pages, posting contact information, meeting agendas and minutes, ordinances and other items of local interest.

Of course a website can help you share what your organization or government is doing, but sometimes that sharing creates a lot of work! With LIAA's Community Center content management solution, the work can be shared by a wide range of people, from staff to volunteers to members of the public. Give your team the power to share and post their knowledge quickly and easily.

Organize

Reaching a common goal with a widely distributed group can be challenging. A custom Community Center website solution can help. Facilitate connections and communication between people or organizations, get feedback on ideas, and display information as projects move through a lifecycle, all from your browser.

Ideas in Action:

Project managers use Community Center websites to keep everyone on the same page. In one large initiative, teachers and students team with community partners to design and promote environmental projects and share continuing education opportunities.

Find

Ideas in Action:

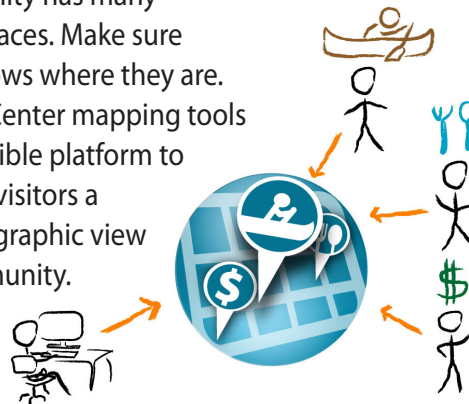

From property searches to environmental data, Community Center's custom database tools help a wide variety of organizations share their information online, making it easy for visitors to find what they need 24 hours a day.

You have information that people want to use — and all too often, they need your help to find it. Make everyone's life a little easier with Community Center's data display tools. They provide a customizable and searchable means to help most users find what they need on their own, freeing you to focus on the rest of your busy day.

Locate

Your community has many interesting places. Make sure everyone knows where they are. Community Center mapping tools provide a flexible platform to give website visitors a dynamic geographic view of your community.

Ideas in Action:
Paddle, hike, eat, shop, sleep and repeat! Community Center websites help communities locate, describe and share all the spots that matter to them, developing a vibrant sense of place for residents and visitors alike.

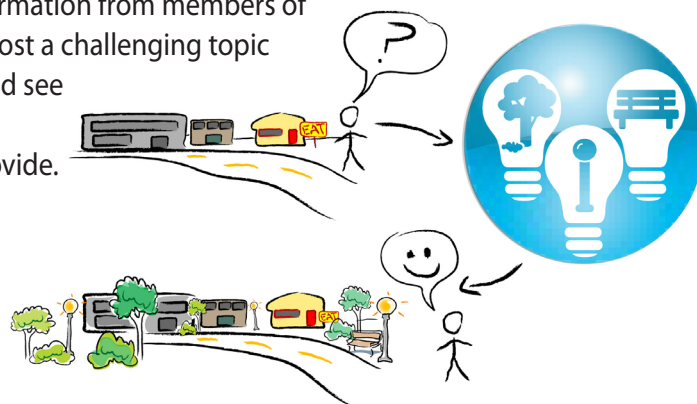

Gather

Ideas in Action:

What kind of community do you want to live in today? What should it look like tomorrow? Planners are using Community Center websites to discuss issues raised during the planning process and gather input from citizens.

There is wisdom in crowds, and Community Center can help you leverage that wisdom by gathering a wide variety of information from members of your community. Post a challenging topic on your website, and see what solutions the community can provide.
